

Fla. $200M Red-Light Camera Class Action Tossed

July 11, 2018

Carlton Fields Shareholder Kevin McCoy was quoted in Law360's article, "Fla. $200M Red-Light Camera Class Action Tossed," highlighting the recent dismissal of a 200 million-dollar class action case that disputed local governments' use of private vendors for red-light camera ticket programs.

The case, brought by civilian motorists, was rejected after the Florida Supreme Court affirmed the legality of arrangements between local counties and third-party contractors, such as American Traffic Solutions, to issue citations for red-light infractions.

McCoy, who serves as American Traffic Solutions' attorney, stated, "This was a long road that crisscrossed the courts at state and federal levels, but it achieved the right result."

Read the article. (Subscription may be required for full access).

Featuring

Kevin P. McCoy

Related Practices

Government Law & Consulting

