

SEC Proposes Major Disclosure Changes for Funds and Advisers

September 28, 2015

The SEC recently published two rule proposals to address concerns over the Commission's ability to gauge and monitor any risks that the asset management industry poses to the financial system and investors. This includes the impact of new fund products and investment management practices, such as exchange-traded funds and the use of derivatives, securities lending, and repurchase agreements. The SEC also hopes to enhance the quality of information available to investors. Among other things, the proposals would:

require funds to report monthly information about their portfolio holdings to the SEC on new Form N-Port, which would replace Form N-Q; require funds annually to report certain other types of information to the SEC on new Form N-CEN, which would replace Form N-SAR; amend Regulation S-X to require standardized, enhanced disclosure about derivatives in fund financial statements; add a new rule to permit funds to fulfill their obligation to transmit periodic reports to their shareholders by making the reports accessible on a website; and require advisers to report additional information on Form ADV about their "separately managed account" business and to maintain records of performance calculations and performance-related communications.

Information provided on Forms N-Port and N-CEN would be in a structured data format to improve the ability of the SEC and the public to aggregate and analyze information across funds and to link the reported information with information from other sources. These SEC proposals are partly a response to continued pressure by other financial regulators to better address the possibility of risks to the financial system. (See "Global Regulators Evolve on Money Manager Systemic Risks" on page 13.) As such, it is not too early for registrants to evaluate the proposed changes in light of their own operations. There is, for example, already speculation that the proposals could cause some funds to halt their securities lending programs due to compliance costs.

Authored By

Edmund J. Zaharewicz

Related Practices

Securities Litigation and Enforcement

©2024 Carlton Fields, P.A. Carlton Fields practices law in California through Carlton Fields, LLP. Carlton Fields publications should not be construed as legal advice on any specific facts or circumstances. The contents are intended for general information and educational purposes only, and should not be relied on as if it were advice about a particular fact situation. The distribution of this publication is not intended to create, and receipt of it does not constitute, an attorney-client relationship with Carlton Fields. This publication may not be quoted or referred to in any other publication or proceeding without the prior written consent of the firm, to be given or withheld at our discretion. To request reprint permission for any of our publications, please use our Contact Us form via the link below. The views set forth herein are the personal views of the author and do not necessarily reflect those of the firm. This site may contain hypertext links to information created and maintained by other entities. Carlton Fields does not control or guarantee the accuracy or completeness of this outside information, nor is the inclusion of a link to be intended as an endorsement of those outside sites.