

Learning to Live with Complexity

September 01, 2011

In just a short time, most businesses have gone from complicated to complex: They contain numerous diverse, interdependent parts. This makes managers' jobs much more difficult.

- They can't predict what will happen when various parts of the business interact; the same starting conditions may yield different results.
- Seemingly simple actions produce unintended consequences.
- Human beings' cognitive limits mean that no manager can understand all aspects of the business but many refuse to acknowledge those limits.
- Rare events can be more significant than average ones—and may occur more often than we think.

Managers can navigate these difficulties by making fundamental changes to how they approach key tasks:

- Forecasting
- Mitigating risks
- Making tradeoffs
- Ensuring diversity of thought

Read the full article online: http://hbr.org/2011/09/learning-to-live-with-complexity/ar/1

©2024 Carlton Fields, P.A. Carlton Fields practices law in California through Carlton Fields, LLP. Carlton Fields publications should not be construed as legal advice on any specific facts or circumstances. The contents are intended for general information and educational purposes only, and should not be relied on as if it were advice about a particular fact situation. The distribution of this publication is not intended to create, and receipt of it does not constitute, an attorney-client relationship with Carlton Fields. This publication may not be quoted or referred to in any other publication or proceeding without the prior written consent of the firm, to be given or withheld at our discretion. To request reprint permission for any of our publications, please use our Contact Us form via the link below. The views set forth herein are the personal views of the author and do not necessarily reflect those of the firm. This site may contain hypertext links to information created and maintained by other entities. Carlton Fields does not control or guarantee the accuracy or completeness of this outside information, nor is the inclusion of a link to be intended as an endorsement of those outside sites.