

The Aftermath of the Hurricane: Emergency Preparedness Rules

December 01, 2017

CMS' 2016 final Emergency Preparedness Rule requires Medicare and Medicaid participating providers and suppliers to plan for natural and man-made disasters in collaboration with federal, state, regional and local emergency preparedness organizations. Participating providers must conduct a risk assessment, develop an emergency plan, implement policies and procedures, communicate the plan, develop training and testing programs and update the plan annually. Providers should revisit the final rule and their existing emergency preparation plans to ensure compliance, as the rule takes effect November of this year. In light of Hurricane Irma and the related nursing home deaths, Florida Governor Rick Scott enacted a Florida emergency rule related to emergency operations of assisted living facilities six days after the storm. The Emergency Rule requires nursing homes and assisted living facilities to maintain generators to run air conditioners in the event of a loss of power. On September 27, 2017, the Emergency Rule was challenged by LeadingAgeFlorida, an organization that represents more than one hundred nursing homes and assisted living facilities. LeadingAgeFlorida argues that it is unrealistic to expect facilities throughout the state to install generators within sixty days, as the Emergency Rule required.

Related Practices

Health Care

Related Industries

Health Care

educational purposes only, and should not be relied on as if it were advice about a particular fact situation. The distribution of this publication is not intended to create, and receipt of it does not constitute, an attorney-client relationship with Carlton Fields. This publication may not be quoted or referred to in any other publication or proceeding without the prior written consent of the firm, to be given or withheld at our discretion. To request reprint permission for any of our publications, please use our Contact Us form via the link below. The views set forth herein are the personal views of the author and do not necessarily reflect those of the firm. This site may contain hypertext links to information created and maintained by other entities. Carlton Fields does not control or guarantee the accuracy or completeness of this outside information, nor is the inclusion of a link to be intended as an endorsement of those outside sites.