

What Contractors Should Know About Building on Sacred Land

October 09, 2019

Carlton Fields government law attorney Kenneth A. Tinkler was quoted in a Construction Dive article focused on what contractors should do if they may be building on a burial ground or other sacred land. He described the due diligence companies should perform on their selected site while planning a construction project. Tinkler also reminded construction crews that if they find remains, they should immediately phone police to make sure they have not stumbled upon a recent crime scene. “It happens more often than you would think, depending on the location,” he said. READ: Construction Dive, “What contractors should know about building on sacred land”

Featuring

Kenneth A. Tinkler

Related Practices

Construction

Government Law & Consulting

Related Industries

Construction

