Overview

Nathan Foell is a litigator whose practice focuses on three areas: class actions; complex commercial litigation and arbitration; and appellate litigation and counseling.

Nathan defends class actions in a broad range of areas, including product liability, consumer protection, and cybersecurity. Nathan co-authors a monthly publication that covers the previous month's notable class action decisions from federal appellate courts, as well as notable Supreme Court cert petitions related to class actions.

Nathan handles complex commercial disputes of many kinds, whether in federal court, state court, or arbitration. Recent examples include disputes in the Middle and Southern Districts of Florida, in Hillsborough County's and Miami-Dade County's Complex Business Litigation Division, and in JAMS and AAA arbitrations.

Nathan litigates appeals in federal and state courts, most frequently in federal circuit and Florida appellate courts. He also provides appellate counsel in high-stakes cases still at the trial level. Nathan clerked for the Honorable David F. Hamilton of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

In 2024, Nathan was selected for the Product Liability Advisory Council's Future Leaders Program and for Best Lawyers in America: Ones to Watch in "Mass Tort Litigation/Class Actions – Defendants."

Nathan maintains a robust pro bono practice. Highlights include serving as first-chair in a federal jury trial, where Nathan represented a plaintiff asserting excessive force claims against the officers that arrested him, and filing a Supreme Court amicus curiae brief on behalf of two leading anti-human trafficking organizations, which was the subject of a Law360 article.
