Overview

Charles Stotter is a commercial litigator whose practice focuses on defending clients in matters involving insurance coverage, securities, and professional liability in federal and state courts and in enforcement proceedings before regulatory agencies.

Charles represents insurance carriers in coverage and bad faith actions and insured directors and officers in breach of fiduciary duty actions. He has also represented public companies and their directors and officers in securities class actions and shareholder derivative litigation, often involving reporting, disclosure, and insider trading issues. He has litigated employment and breach of contract disputes, and prosecuted and defended trademark litigation matters. He has counseled clients in disputes over closely held corporations and business contracts, and advised clients on risk management and liability issues. In litigation, enforcement, and related proceedings, he has represented accountants and accounting firms, and defended attorneys against malpractice claims.

In complex insurance coverage actions, Charles has obtained favorable resolutions with his focused litigation and motion practice that exposed the opposing parties' weaknesses and sustained his clients' positions, including in defending a claim seeking fidelity insurance coverage arising out of the Bernard Madoff scheme and in defending claims seeking professional liability coverage for nationwide lawsuits by mortgage borrowers arising out of allegedly improper lender-placed insurance. He also obtained dismissal of claims seeking coverage under a general liability policy because the insured could not establish its claims were covered. In shareholder class actions, Charles obtained dismissal of federal securities fraud claims brought against a public company and its directors and officers. He secured dismissal of state law fiduciary duty claims brought against directors of a public company in shareholder derivative actions. Charles also obtained recovery for a putative minority shareholder in a closely held corporation.

As local counsel and co-counsel, Charles coordinated and conducted litigation in a $14 billion multidistrict securities fraud and accountant liability case. Through a defense verdict at trial and upholding that verdict on a subsequent appeal, Charles co-chaired the successful defense of a $7 million securities fraud and accountant liability claim. Without personal liability to his accounting firm clients, he defended and favorably settled a $40 million professional negligence claim arising from the failure of a securities broker-dealer.

As prior in-house counsel for the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., Charles managed and directed more than 40 investigations and the resulting litigation of claims against professionals affiliated with 20 failed banks. Notably, he achieved a 29% reduction in litigation costs through the use of in-house professionals.

He has often addressed industry groups on insurance coverage, securities, and professional liability matters. One of Charles' published works was cited by the New Jersey Supreme Court as an authority in an important opinion on attorney malpractice issues.

Charles also is involved in his community, serving for many years as an officer and on the board of a local community organization. He is active in bar association activities and currently serves as a vice chair of the ABA Section of Litigation's Commercial and Business Litigation Committee and editor in chief of its website content.
