Overview

Lee Stapleton is a trial lawyer recognized nationally for her achievements in complex commercial litigation and white collar criminal defense.

Lee has a long record of handling complex matters for clients ranging from individuals to Fortune 500 companies throughout the United States, Latin America, and Europe. She is regularly retained as litigation counsel for clients in a variety of industries. Her domestic and international practice includes business disputes as well as a wide variety of white collar matters.

Prior to going into private practice, Lee had a storied 16-year career as a federal prosecutor. As chief assistant U.S. attorney for the Southern District of Florida, she helped manage the busiest U.S. attorney's office in the country. For two years, Lee worked in Washington running a major program at the Department of Justice. She then returned to Miami to serve as senior litigation counsel in the Economic Crimes section of the U.S. attorney's office.

Lee served as the 2015 president and chair of the Orange Bowl Committee, which hosts the premier college football playoff game. Lee joined the committee in 2002. As the organization's 77th president, she oversaw the national College Football Playoff semifinal game in the first year of the current post-season system. Lee also spearheaded a girls golf program through the committee.

Before law school, Lee worked as a journalist, a skill she puts to use today as editor in chief of the American Bar Association's Litigation Journal. She frequently writes published articles and writes a weekly blog about college football. Lee also appeared for many years as an on-air weekly legal analyst for WPLG Channel 10 News, Miami's ABC affiliate.
